Spenser is an experienced barrister and mediator.

He was formerly a non-executive director of North Middlesex Hospital NHS Trust where he was instrumental in developing risk management procedures for personal injury claims leading to the early settlement of many cases.

He has a particular interest in the psychology of conflict, particularly the effect of cognitive biases on people involved in conflict and brings a unique combination of skills to his negotiations and mediations.

In addition to his mediation practice, Spenser is recognised internationally as an expert trainer in advanced mediation skills and “train the trainers” programmes.

He has recently conducted successful mediation training courses in Singapore, Albania, Romania, Croatia, the Baltic States and has trained judges in Jordan in mediation skills on behalf of the British Ministry of Justice.

He is on the Communications Committee of the Civil Mediation Council, the Delivery Group of the Slynn Foundation and is a visiting lecturer at the Regents University course on Mediation Skills.
